RECOMMENDATION FROM LIUTENANT NATHANIEL HAYES, UNITED STATES NAVY

Petty Officer Algarin was one of my more junior Sailors at the beginning of our deployment on USS Nimitz (CVN 68) in 2013, but by the end of our deployment she had been promoted to Work Center Supervisor and was degrees of magnitude better than the other Work Center Supervisors. If it hadn't been for her junior rank, I would have promoted her above the division's Leading Petty Officer, she was that good. It wasn't just her technical abilities, but her determination to fix our gear, her ability to understand and solve complex problems in a stressful environment, and most importantly, her initiative. On several occasions, Petty Officer Algarin would bring impending problems to the attention of the division chief and I that we hadn't realized. She would also bring a solution. I was disappointed when I learned that she would leave the Navy, but I could not state more emphatically that she will be a great hire and one that will make any good company better.
